THE GRAND DUKE'S HUNT.

Grand Battle on the Plains

NORTH PLATTE, NEB., Jan. 13th.
Young Alexis, the Grand Duke of Russia, is now happy out here on the almost boundless plains of the West. He is far away from the gaze of gaping citizens and the interruptions of inquisitive dignitaries. For several days to come he will enjoy this pleasing seclusion and indulge in the unrestrained sport of hunting and slaying the noble buffalo in untold numbers. There are no philanthropic Berghs here to molest him or make him afraid, and be neither hunted nor alarmed with terrors or threats of a prosecution.

threats of a prosecution.

In company with his suite the Duke strived here in his special train at 6 o'clock this morning accompanied by General Sheridan and staff, who took a run up as far as Omaha yesterday to meet the imperial party. The time from 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon until from 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon until this morning was spent on the rail be-tween here and the eastern terminus of was prepared on the train, and the representatives af the Imperial navy and of the United States army and their friends had a very lively and agreeable time of it as the Pullman cars were settlement were all out in the gray twilight of morning to see and welcome the Imperial visitor. Their reception, however, was unlike those which the people of the East or the Central West had awarded. There was no crowding, no cheers, no excitement, but a sort of

As the Duke alighted from the train the rustic natives of North Platte formed in line along the platform, and atmost as involuntarily as simultaneously removed their hats in honor of the distinguished visitor. Little Phil was master of ceremonies, and he was bound that a mome t should not be lost in starting for the camp, fity miles distant

He had arranged with the gental and daring "Buffalo Bill" to be on hand daring "Baffalo Bill" to be on hand and act as guide, and this renowned scout was promptly on hand in all his element. He was seated on a spanking charger, and with his long hair and spangled buckskin suit he appeared in his true character of the feared and beloved of all for miles around. The effulgence was not temperary, but tasted all the day long, and many grateful hearts acknowledged thanks for the happy combinations of the natural elements which go to make up the weather. A couple of miles from North Platte station the hunters and tourists were met by a company of the Second cavalry, which acted as escort to the hunting grounds, under command of General Palmer, commander of the farces at Omaha. No delay was permitted here—simply a salute of honor—and the journey was resumed. Red Willow Creek, the camping ground and general rendezvous, was reached after about eight hours ride. There were no incidents of any moment along the route. Stray buffalo were seen, and His Imperial Highness brought down and wounded a few of them. Sloux Indiaus were also met, but they were full of fear. Sheridan and Buffalo Bul have persuaded them to such a course, and furthermore, in order to procure their good behavior, the General has brought out twenty wagon loads of provisions and supplies which he has promised to distribute impartially among the red men at the end of the hunt if they resistant themselves from any violence.

You think that one hour buries another; but it is not so. You think that you have parted forever from the things which have passed by you. No, you have not. There is much of your life that you think has gone, which you shall never part from. It has stepped behind you; and there it waits. That which you have done is with you to-day; will be with you to-morrow. When the mason carries up the wall, the course of brick which he laid yesterday is the foundation on which he is laying another course to-day. And all terday is the foundation on which he is laying another course to-day. And all that you do to-day on the structure which you are building, will remain as a basis for that which you do to-mor-row. The work proceeds without in-termission; and all that has been done is under structure for that which is to

A lad, aged 19 years, was hung for murder at Pittsfield, Ill., recently. He acknowledged his guilt, but said that he was drunk when he committed the crime. The main point, however, is that by our statute we give this Bartholomew Barnes only 19 years for moral discipline, for the building up of character and a preparation for an advanced stage of existence, while our Creator, other things being equal gives every human being three score years and ten. It is certainly known to the Maker of all men what period of time each one of his human creatures requires for discipline here; and this II-lines boy, thrust out of earthly life at 19, undoubtedly lived just as long as God inteded that he should, the same being true of the man who was killed. The hand of the Deity is in all; but it requires no great stretch of comprehension to understand the different relations which God and man bear to this legal killing. Offenses must come, but not less is the responsibility of those through whom they come.

The following commeuts from the Cincinnati Engineer on the murder, and all memory of former kindness is obliterated.

The principle of Local Prohibition—that is, of allowing each City and each Township to decide for itself whether the Liquor Traffic shall or shall not be licensed within its limits—is now very generally accepted; but different modes of action are suggested, and these will naturally come up for consideration.

We plead for the Ballot, as every way more trustworthy and less troublesome than that of Pstitlon. Who can say whether the names on a petition are or are not all those of legal voters?

Where the same name is signed to a petition for and one against License, who can tell which is genuine, or when both are so, which indicates the signer's real wish? All know how easily most people sign petitions, and the longer list of signers will often indicate superior activity in circulating petitions rather than greater strength. And then such circulation involves the stowed. What we suggest is that each voter for City or Town Officers shall be authorized to deposit a separate ballot indorsed "Liquor Question," and reading with "License" or "No License," as may be his choice. The vote on this proposition being ascertained and declared, let it be received and respected as an imperative mandate, directing or or "anti-License," which other consider the year ensuing. At the next election, let a fresh vote be likewise taken and likewise respected. This plan avoids the confusion of issues involved in the election of officers as "License' or "anti-License," which other considered will be decided on its own merits and by a distinct vote. No caucusing, no wire-pulling, can avail under this plan; if a majority favor grog-shops, their votes will say so; if not, they will say just that. And each year's experience will be influential upon next year's decision, as it should be. No other plan seems to us so direct, simple, fair, and inexpensive as this.
